ABSTRACT

In response to requests for up-to-date and authentic resources covering the increasing and changing occupational opportunities within the health manpower area, the New Jersey Health Careers Service has revised, expanded and updated its 1964 Health Careers Bibliography. This second edition lists only those materials published since 1964. Over 3500 items were examined, of which 1500 were selected. Included with medical and related careers necessary to essential health services, several new careers have been added, so that a wide range of occupations requiring different levels of education, training, intellectual abilities, skills and responsibilities is represented. The items are classified alphabetically according to the health career designations and code numbers of the Dictionary of Occupational Titles (DOT), an effective system for counseling purposes. A letter code refers to type of publication and a number rating helps to determine usefulness. Only those books which would have motivational value for counseling young people were chosen. (MW)

PREFACE

The first edition of HEALTH CAREERS BIBLIOGRAPHY FOR GUIDANCE COUNSELORS that was published in 1964 by the New Jersey Health Careers Service proved to be a very valuable and effective reference tool for guidance counselors and others charged with the responsibility of helping young people with their career planning and vocational decisions. That the BIBLIOGRAPHY filled a basic need is indicated by its extensive use as a quick and easy guide to health career information; and by numerous requests for current, supplementary data pertaining to the expanding and newly developing job opportunities in the health field.

Disseminating occupational information carries with it responsibility for keeping it accurate, recent, comprehensive, and available. Busy counselors find it difficult to keep pace with the increasing output of publications on health careers that appear in many printed forms with varying degrees of quality and usefulness. They seek and welcome authoritative sources of such data.

In response to requests for up-to-date and authentic resources covering the increasing and changing occupational opportunities within the health manpower area, the New Jersey Health Careers Service provided a grant for a special project to revise, expand, and update the first edition of HEALTH CAREERS BIBLIOGRAPHY. This second edition supplements the first effort, listing only those materials published since 1964 to the present. References can still be made to the first edition for earlier publications.

The arduous task of gathering, reviewing and evaluating quantities of printed materials that describe health occupations was undertaken by Peter Fabriele, a guidance counselor with an M.A. in Student and Personnel Services. Appreciation is extended to him for endless hours of research to produce this BIBLIOGRAPHY. Over 3500 items were examined of which 1500 were selected for inclusion in this edition, based upon evaluation standards of NVGA criteria.

This HEALTH CAREERS BIBLIOGRAPHY is unique in that it brings together in a single publication such a large body of references on such a large spread of occupations in the health field. It is hoped that further revisions and supplements can be made from time to time to keep it accurate and up-to-date so that it can continue to serve as a valuable resource aid for presenting occupational information to young people interested in pursuing careers in health.

The New Jersey Health Careers Service is a state-wide voluntary organization made up of different professional associations in the State representing health and educational groups, civic and community organizations who share a common interest in helping to motivate interest of young people in health careers. This BIBLIOGRAPHY and other aids such as a quarterly Newsletter, films and audio visual materials, speakers, etc., are available upon request from the New Jersey Health Careers Service, 375 West State Street, Trenton New Jersey 08618, (609-695-9445).

INTRODUCTION

The overwhelming task of gleaning from currently published occupational literature those items which meet professional standards of accuracy, reliability, and currency is indeed a formidable one. Under several occupational headings, the counselor finds a dearth of materials, under others there is an excess. Some materials approach a high degree of accuracy and reliability, others are less desirable and often misleading, and provide little, if any, value.

The first edition of Health Careers Bibliography for Guidance Counselors published in 1964 by the New Jersey Health Careers Service analyzed the bulk of extant occupational literature from this maze of data and compiled a classified, alphabetical listing of health careers publications that were screened and evaluated according to National Vocational Guidance Association (NVGA) Standards for Use in Preparing and Evaluating Occupational Literature. The Bibliography proved to be a very valuable and useful tool for counselors who were responsible for helping students with their career planning.

The thrust of this revised Bibliography was to supplement the earlier effort by investigation of newly published materials, rather than to repeat inclusion of items that already appear in the first edition. Accordingly, materials reviewed for the second edition represent those published since 1964 up to the present. Materials for this revised edition were assembled from more than 400 sources including: publishers, professional organizations, federal and state agencies, hospitals, schools, and industries. Over 3,000 health career brochures, pamphlets, monographs, fact sheets, abstracts, job series, briefs, books, etc., were reviewed and evaluated, using the NVGA Standards as a basis for selection. Included are the medical careers and the related careers that are necessary in the coordination and maintaining of essential health services. Several new careers have been added, such as areas of aerospace medicine, computer operator, counselor, and others. There is represented a wide range of occupations requiring differing levels of education, training, intellectual abilities, skills and responsibilities that are found in the many different work settings and types of activities in health careers.

After careful research and evaluation, those items deemed appropriate were classified alphabetically according to the health career designations and code numbers of the Dictionary of Occupational Titles (DOT). This classification and coding system enhances the effectiveness of the Bibliography for counseling purposes. It simplifies the filing and retrieving of occupational data. Also, at the end of each item, letters from A to N refer to the type of publication; and the numbers 1, 2, and 3 refer to the kind of recommendation, whether it is highly recommended, recommended, or useful, as presented in the NVGA Classification and Coding Guide on the following page.

Expenditures necessary to purchase the various items listed in the Bibliography vary. Many of the paperback materials, pamphlets, booklets, and fact sheets are relatively inexpensive; in many instances they are free. Hard cover materials or books of biography and other non-fiction, cost considerably more, within a wide price range. Selection of books was necessarily limited. Only those books which would have motivational value for counseling young people were chosen. Selections were further limited, since the output of suitable career books during the years 1965-69 was not extensive. References to books published prior to 1965 can be made to the first edition of the Bibliography.

Gratitude is extended to the many groups and organizations who have contributed materials and information that made this publication possible. It is hoped that counselors will find this revision and updating of the Health Careers Bibliography a valuable resource aid.

CLASSIFICATION AND CODING GUIDE *

	Type of Publication
A-Career Fiction	An account, portrayed through the experiences of one or more fictional characters, of an occupation which may encompass duties, qualifications, preparations, conditions, and nature of work and advancement.
B-Biography	An account of the life of a successful man or woman in a given field of endeavor portraying the problems faced by these people in preparing for an advancement in their careers.
C-Occupational Monograph	Extensive coverage of all phases of an occupation. A detailed, comprehensive analysis of a field of work and its related occupations. (about 4,000 - 8,000 words)
D-Occupational Brief	Covers the various types of specialization in an occupational field in general terms. Not as extensive as a monograph, yet describes all phases of the various job opportunities. Usually prose style. (about 3,000 words)
E-Occupational Abstract	A concise summary of a job in an occupational area citing the duties and nature of employment, etc., in general terms. May be in prose or outline form. (about 1,500 words)
F-Occupational Guide	Brief facts about various phases of an occupational title. Contains general information about the occupation but does not describe any particular job. May be in outline form. Often a booklet or leaflet.
G-Job Series	Broad coverage of an entire occupational area giving brief accounts of all job opportunities in the field. May be book, manual, or article.
H-Business and Industrial descriptive literature	Describes a particular business or industry. May show scope and pattern of occupational opportunities.

* NVGA Bibliography of Current Occupational Literature 1966 Edition, Career Information Review Service of the National Vocational Guidance Association, APGA, Washington, D. C.

I-Occupational or industrial description	Describes the principal opportunities of an occupation in one industry or one occupation in several industries. Discusses an occupation as it relates to employment opportunities in industry. May include a brief account of the industry or industries.
J-Recruitment literature	Descriptive promotional information pointed toward recruiting young men and women in an occupation or career field. Brief coverage of facts.
K-Poster or Chart	Occupational information presented by pictures, graphs, tables, etc., in black and white or color, portraying information about jobs, opportunities, trends, qualifications and preparation. Data in concise summarized form permitting a quick review of, or stimulating an interest in, a major occupational group.
L-Article or reprint	An account of an occupation, a phase of an occupation, or a person performing the occupation. Covers most phases of the job. Varies in length and degree of coverage. May also be a fact sheet, series of tables, etc. Usually, but not necessarily, in prose style. May be newspaper, magazine, or other publication.
M-Community survey economic report, job analysis	Very accurate, highly statistical, comprehensive reports made as the result of local, national, or industrial studies. Professional studies not easily adapted to student use.
N-Other	Specialized occupational studies, general occupational reviews, technical reports, or portions thereof, if applicable, and other miscellaneous occupational information. Information presented by types other than those listed above should be accounted for here. Includes occupations in relation to specific college curricula.

	Recommendation
1-Highly recommended	Maximum adherence to NVGA Standards. Adequately meets most of the points outlined. A very high caliber publication--comprehensive, authentic, objective, readable, and up-to-date.
2-Recommended	General adherence to NVGA Standards. Adequately meets more than half the points outlined. A high caliber publication--authentic, objective, readable, up-to-date, but not necessarily as comprehensive.
3-Useful	Does not adequately meet NVGA Standards because limited in scope. However, contains information helpful to students making it worth including in an occupational file or library. In all cases, applicable information is authentic, objective, readable and timely.
